Noted events in his life were:

- He worked as a Secretary to HM The Queen.

10-Hon. George Edward Adeane was born on 4 Oct 1939 and died on 20 May 2015 at age 75.

General Notes: Edward Adeane, who has died aged 75, was a former private secretary and treasurer to the Prince of Wales, descended from a distinguished line of courtiers. He was the son of Sir Michael (later Lord) Adeane, a long-serving private secretary to the Queen. Neither would have served had the Zulus not severed the arteries of the Prince Imperial in 1879. Queen Victoria wished to recognise the services of one Arthur Bigge to the ill-fated prince, and thus she adopted him into her household. He went on to become private secretary to King George V, dying in office as Lord Stamfordham in 1931. His daughter, Victoria, was the mother of Michael Adeane. An only son, George Edward Adeane was born on October 4 1939. His mother, Helen, was the daughter of Richard Chetwynd-Stapleton. He was educated at Eton and Magdalene College, Cambridge, and was a page of honour to the Queen from 1954 to 1956. Adeane behind the Princess of Wales (Getty) He was called to the Bar by Middle Temple in 1962 and specialised in libel. In 1973 he appeared for Playboy Publications Inc, the publishers of Oui magazine, who had printed an article about the film actress Fiona Lewis, suggesting that she had been involved in revolutionary activities in South America. She was paid substantial damages. In 1974 he represented the owners of The Spectator when they libelled the publishers Jonathan Cape by suggesting that they were in financial difficulty. Damages were paid to Cape. The following year, Adeane was more successful in his representation of Lady Falkender, Harold Wilson's political and personal secretary, when she was falsely accused by the Evening Standard of forging Wilson's signature on a document when he was leader of the opposition. She was paid appropriate damages and legal costs. Adeane gave up his practice at the Bar in 1979 to succeed Squadron Leader David Checketts as private secretary to the Prince of Wales. At the time of his appointment it was widely thought that he would become a permanent fixture, emulating his great-grandfather, Lord Stamfordham, of whom King George V wrote: "He taught me how to be a king. He was the most loyal friend I have ever had." Adeane was certainly a friend of Prince Charles, and they shared an interest in shooting and fishing; both were members of the Houghton, the Hampshire fishing club on the Test, near Stockbridge, where Adeane caught his limit on the last weekend before he died. Adeane was in the Prince's service when he became engaged to Lady Diana Spencer in 1981. This led to an amusing misunderstanding in the forecourt of Albany, where Adeane had a set. In the late spring of that year, Adeane informed the porters that he was expecting Lady Diana to lunch with him. There was instant panic, and valuable cars were moved to safer parking places, in fear of the arrival of the 88-year-old Lady Diana Cooper in her brown Mini. She was a regular visitor to friends in Albany and her erratic driving and heterodox method of parking had caused them grief on many occasions in the past. The porters laboured in vain, since it was Lady Diana Spencer who drove up, parking her Mini Metro neatly. This lunch did not lay the foundations for a felicitous relationship between the Prince's bride and his private secretary. Adeane soon found himself one of several figures who were sidelined by the nervous and suspicious Princess as she disposed in quick succession of a number of the Prince's long-serving and loyal staff. Nevertheless he was additionally appointed private secretary to the Princess in 1984, following the resignation of Oliver Everett. In 1985 Adeane resigned after a number of disagreements, including accusations that he had made plans without consulting the Prince and that his style was too much of the old school. On the other hand, Adeane found that the Prince almost invariably did the opposite of what he advised. A point at issue was the lack of time that he spent in the Principality of Wales, something Adeane tried in vain to alter. The Queen honoured Adeane with a CVO, the Prince of Wales appointed him an Extra Equerry which involved occasionally representing the Prince at Royal Household memorial services and he returned to the Bar. He was probably not surprised that after his departure there was a succession of private secretaries who remained in office for very short periods. Adeane may have lost the official favour of the Prince of Wales, but he continued to be a regular guest of Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother at Birkhall each September. Latterly he held various directorships and was for some years a member of the British Library board and a trustee of Lambeth Palace library. Edward Adeane was a retiring figure, remembered as having disliked games at school, and as being fond of fine food (he always ate out, even breakfast). He was a well-liked man. He is survived by his companion, Brent Snape. Edward Adeane, born October 4 1939, died May 20 2015. The Daily Telegraph

7-Joseph Herbert Tritton¹³ was born on 5 Sep 1844 in Olney Lodge, Battersea, Surrey and died on 11 Sep 1923 in Lyons Hall, Great Leigh, Chelmsford, Essex at age 79.

General Notes: Tritton, Joseph Herbert (1844– 1923), banker, was born on 5 September 1844 at Olney Lodge, Battersea, Surrey, the eldest son of Joseph Tritton (1819– 1887), a Quaker banker, and his wife, Amelia, daughter of Joseph Hanson of Brixton. He was educated at Rugby School (c.1855– 1862). On 17 June 1867, he married Lucy Jane, the daughter of Henry Abel Smith (1826– 1890) of Wilford, Nottingham, a member of a banking family with interests in Lincoln and Nottingham. They had five sons and four daughters. The family house was at Lyons Hall, Great Leighs, Chelmsford, the Essex property inherited by his father and passed on to him.

After leaving Rugby, Tritton joined the bank of Barclay, Bevan, Tritton, Twells & Co. in 1867, and became a junior partner. He was following family tradition, as members of the Tritton family had held partnerships in the firm since 1783, when John Hinton Tritton (his great-grandfather) entered the bank. Through various changes of partnership and the takeover of Ransome, Bouverie & Co. of Pall Mall in 1888 and the Brighton Union Bank in 1894 the name Tritton remained in the title. The bank's name was distinctive and, in the years between 1888 and 1896, Barclay, Bevan, and Tritton, Ransome, Bouverie & Co. was popularly known as 'the long firm' (DBB, 558).

The business still operated as a private bank, as a member of the London Clearing House and as clearing bank for a number of country partnerships, many of which had family and Quaker connections with the partners in Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co. During the period when Tritton became a full partner it was becoming clear that the days of the private banks were numbered, and that to protect their relationship with the country banks and prevent their absorption into the rapidly growing joint-stock companies it was necessary to form a limited company. The partners in Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co. were the key figures in the foundation of Barclay & Co. in 1896. They nevertheless hoped to continue the private character of their existing institutions by restricting shareholdings to the partners of the twenty amalgamating firms (mostly Quaker). The character of the private banker is well illustrated by Tritton's pithy comment that there were 'three cardinal virtues in the banker's character— Incredulity, Affability and the Power to say No' ('President's address to the Institute of Bankers', 1885).

Tritton became a member of the first board of directors, as well as a local director in the Lombard Street local head office. He remained on the board until his retirement in 1918, and one of his sons followed him into the bank in 1914. Tritton was a progressive banker, and enthusiastic about the establishment of a professional forum for the training of young bankers and the discussion of professional issues. He was a founder member of the Institute of Bankers, serving on the council from the beginning, and served as the institute's third president (1885– 1887), after Sir John Lubbock and Richard Biddulph Martin. He also served a second term of office in 1902– 4. As president he started the practice of reviewing the previous year in his presidential address. One of the main reasons for establishing the institute was to improve the education of clerks and, in discussions over the type of syllabus to be offered, Tritton supported the Billingham scheme, which advocated a practical syllabus for training bankers. In 1902, when he sat on a committee to review the syllabus, he recommended the introduction of commercial history and geography. As chairman in 1886 he announced that his bank would follow the lead of the London and County Bank in offering a gratuity to successful candidates in the institute's exams.

Tritton was active in most of the pressure groups representing bankers in the City. In the institute and other forums he contributed papers and took part in discussions on a variety of practical topics like bills of exchange and the London money market. He was a founder member and treasurer of the Central Association of Bankers formed in 1895 by representatives of the committee of the London Clearing House, the West End banks and the Association of English Country Bankers to 'speak in the name of all the Banks in the Country' (Green, 72). In addition he was a member of the Council of Foreign Bondholders, honorary secretary of the Committee of London Clearing Bankers (1891– 1905), and a founder member of the London chamber of commerce, of which he became president.

Tritton was a 'sound money' man and took a prominent position in the defence of the gold standard in the controversy over the remonetization of silver and the establishment of a connected rate for the two metals. Like most City men, Tritton feared it would lead to inflation and undermine Britain's position as a financial centre in the world. He was a chairman of the Gold Standard Defence Association established in 1895, and in the same year gave an address to the London Institution entitled 'The assault on the gold standard'. The assault came from the Bimetallic League, which saw the remonetization of silver as a way of easing trade with the rest of the world and thereby increasing employment at home.

Consistent with his stand on the gold standard and free trade, Tritton argued for free trade saying that 'as a business man, in the centre of the business of the world, and with his hand on the pulse of the trade of the world he looked with dread upon even a suggestion to close our ports whether he considered the home trade or the international trade which brought an enormous profit to this country' (The Times, 4 Jan 1904).

Tritton was a lieutenant for the City of London, chairman of the Indo-European Telegraph Company, and a member of the Company of Shipwrights and of the fellowship of the Russia Company. In his private life he was keenly interested in genealogy and produced a history of his family called Tritton: the Place and the Family in 1907. Like his father, he wrote religious poetry and was involved in charity work, particularly for the Young Men's Christian Association. He received the Persian order of the Lion and the Sun.

In 1918 Tritton retired from the board of Barclays. A fall from his horse restricted his activities in his later years, and he died at his home, Lyons Hall, Great Leighs, Essex on 11 September 1923. He was described in an obituary as 'a link with a generation of business men which has now all but disappeared, and of a time when manners were more stately and life more leisurely' (Journal of the Institute of Bankers, 1923).

Harriet married Joseph Gurney, son of William Brodie Gurney¹³ and Ann Benham, on 29 Aug 1843 in Battersea, London. Joseph was born on 15 Oct 1804 in London, died on 12 Aug 1879 in Tyndale House, Wimbledon, Surrey at age 74, and was buried in Norwood Cemetery. They had four children: Harriet, Edward Tritton, Joseph John, and Catherine.

General Notes: Gurney, Joseph (1804– 1879), shorthand writer and biblical scholar, was the eldest son of William Brodie Gurney (1777– 1855), the philanthropist, and his wife, whose maiden name was Benham (d. 1830). He was born in London on 15 October 1804, a year after his parents' marriage, but details of his childhood and education are not known. He acted as secretary to his first important committee of the House of Commons in 1822, and he continued to take notes until 1872. He was married twice: first to Emma (d. 1842), daughter of E. Rawlings, with whom he had several children, including the educationist Mary Gurney, and then to Harriet, daughter of J. Tritton of Lombard Street, London. They had two sons, William Gurney and Joseph John Gurney. On his father's resignation in 1849, Gurney was appointed shorthand writer to the houses of parliament. Like his father he was greatly interested in religious and philanthropic movements. He was for more than fifty years a member of the committee of the Religious Tract Society, and latterly its treasurer. He was also treasurer of the Baptist college in Regent's Park. He was well read in biblical scholarship and devoted much time to bringing out popular commentaries on the Bible. The best-known of these was The annotated paragraph Bible, containing the Old and New testaments according to the Authorised Version, with explanatory notes, prefaces to the several books, and an entirely new selection of references to parallel and illustrative passages (2 vols., 1850– 60), published by the Religious Tract Society. It was highly popular and was well received on an academic level. The notes were prepared by able contemporaries under Gurney's supervision. Besides two or three other Bibles, he brought out the Revised English Bible (1877) on the same lines as, and closely resembling, the later official Revised Version. The profits of his literary works he gave to the Religious Tract Society. On his retirement from the office of shorthand writer to the houses of parliament in 1872, the office was given to his nephew, Mr William Henry Gurney Salter. Gurney died at his home, Tyndale Lodge, Wimbledon Common, Surrey, on 12 August 1879, and was buried at Norwood cemetery.

4-Dr. John Sims¹³ was born on 13 Oct 1749 in Canterbury, Kent, died on 26 Feb 1831 in Dorking, Surrey at age 81, and was buried in Fittleworth, Sussex.

General Notes: Sims, John (1749– 1831), physician and botanist, was the son of Robert Courthope Sims, a member of the Society of Friends, who for sixty years practised as a physician at Dunmow, Essex, and was the author of An Essay on the Nature and Constitution of Man (1793), and of The Constitution and Economy of Man's Nature (1807). John Sims was born in Canterbury on 13 October 1749, and was educated partly at the Quaker academy in Burford, Oxfordshire, and partly by his father, who was a good classical scholar. In 1770 he proceeded to the University of Edinburgh, and, after passing the session of 1773– 4 at Leiden, graduated MD at Edinburgh in 1774, his inaugural dissertation being 'De usu aquae frigidae interno'.

Sims settled in London and bought the practice of Thomas Cogan in Paternoster Row; in 1779 he was admitted a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. He had a large practice, with many of his patients coming from the Quaker community. In 1790 he married Ann (d. 1835) and with her had six children. Sims was obliged to resign from the Society of Friends in 1790 as his wife was not a Quaker. He became physician to the Surrey Dispensary and to the Charity for Delivering Poor Married Women in their own houses. A renowned accoucheur, in 1814 he examined Joanna Southcott, the religious mystic, who had announced that she was pregnant with the Shiloh. Sims wrote an article in the Morning Chronicle claiming that Southcott was not pregnant but was suffering from mental delusion and diseased internal organs. After her death in 1818 Sims was present at the examination of her body, but no cause of death was ascertained. Sims also acted as physician to Princess Charlotte and attended her labour in 1817, when complications arose.

Sims edited William Curtis's Botanical Magazine from 1801 to 1826, and the Annals of Botany from 1805 to 1806, in conjunction with Charles Konig. He was elected a fellow of the Royal Society in 1814 and was a member of the society's midwifery committee. He was also one of the original fellows of the Linnean Society. In January 1826 Sims gave to the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, a set of objects which he had been given by Thomas Guest, a former army surgeon in the employ of the Sierra Leone Company. Sims's donation to the Ashmolean (now in the Pitt-Rivers Museum, Oxford) comprised a bow, quiver of arrows, a pair of sandals, knife, and a pocket or pouch. They have been traced to the Fula traders who brought goods to Freeport on the Rio Pongo, north of Freetown, and were described by Guest (15 June 1797) as 'the complete Accoutrements of an Inhabitant of the Mandingo Country' (Coote, 154). In this period Sims was resident at 37 Wimpole Street, London.

Some time after 1826 Sims left the capital and retired to Dorking, Surrey, where he died on 26 February 1831. He was buried on 5 March 1831 in Fittleworth, Sussex, where his son Courthope was a curate.

Descendants of John Tritton

Sims was commemorated by Robert Brown in the Mexican genus of Compositae, Simsia. His herbarium was purchased by George Bentham, and was located at Kew. Sims contributed an account of the expansion of Mesembryanthemum under the influence of moisture to the Medical and Physical Journal (vol. 2, 1799), and a 'Description of Amomum exscapum' to the Annals of Botany (vol. 1).
